

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

23498
6.5.35

23498, 6, 5, 35

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY

ORESTES
A Tragedy

ORESTES

A Tragedy

by

Richard Le Gallienne

NEW YORK
MITCHELL KENNERLEY MCMX

23498.6.5.35

~~P~~ Copyright, 1910, by Mitchell Kennerley

---

The acting rights of Orestes are the property of William Faversham

TO WILLIAM AND JULIE FAVERSHAM IN FRIENDSHIP AND WITH HIGH ADMIRATION OF THEIR NOBLE ARTISTIC GIFTS AND IDEALS

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18 19 20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28
29
30
31
32
33
34
35
36
37
38
39
40
41
42
43
44
45
46
47
48
49
50
51
52
53
54
55
56
57
58
59
60
61
62
63
64
65
66
67
68
69
70
71
72
73
74
75
76
77
78
79 80
81
82
83
84
85
86
87
88
89
90
91
92
93
94
95
96
97
98
99
100

101
102
103
104
105
106
107
108
109
110
111
112
113
114
115
116
117
118
119
120
121
122
123
124
125
126
127
128
129
130
131
132
133
134
135
136
137
138
139
140
141
142
143
144
145
146
147
148
149
150
151
152
153
154
155
156
157
158
159
160
161
162
163
164
165
166
167
168
169
170
171
172
173
174
175
176
177
178
179
180
181
182
183
184
185
186
187
188
189
190
191
192
193
194
195
196
197
198
199
200

The following play has been written at the instance of Mr. William Faversham, who, being desirous of producing a music-drama on the story of Orestes, to the accompaniment of Massenet's music—music originally written for Leconte de Lisle's "Les Érinnyes"—and not being satisfied with the dramatic qualities of De Lisle's play, asked me to make for him another version.

In making this version, I have, therefore, been somewhat circumscribed by the necessity of following the lead of the music, particularly in the first act, which I desire the reader to regard as a prologue, and subsidiary to the second act, which is the real play.

In both acts, as has been the case with others who have treated the theme, I have, in the main, followed Æschylus, for the dramatic action; but the interpretation of the characters, and the words which I have put into their mouths, are entirely my own.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE

February, 1910.

100

101

102

103

104

105

106

107

108

109

110

111

112

113

114

115

116

117

118

119

120

121

122

123

124

125

126

127

128

129

130

131

132

133

134

135

136

137

138

139

140

141

142

143

144

145

146

147

148

149

150

151

152

153

154

155

156

157

158

159

160

161

162

163

164

165

166

167

168

169

170

171

172

173

174

175

176

177

178

179

180

181

182

183

184

185

186

187

188

189

190

191

192

193

194

195

196

197

198

199

200

201

202

203

204

205

206

207

208

209

210

211

212

213

214

215

216

217

218

219

220

221

222

223

224

225

226

227

228

229

230

231

232

233

234

235

236

237

238

239

240

241

242

243

244

245

246

247

248

249

250

251

252

253

254

255

256

257

258

259

260

261

262

263

264

265

266

267

268

269

270

271

272

273

274

275

276

277

278

279

280

281

282

283

284

285

286

287

288

289

290

291

292

293

294

295

296

297

298

299

300

301

302

303

304

305

306

307

308

309

310

311

312

313

314

315

316

317

318

319

320

321

322

323

324

325

326

327

328

329

330

331

332

333

334

335

336

337

338

339

340

341

342

343

344

345

346

347

348

349

350

351

352

353

354

355

356

357

358

359

360

361

362

363

364

365

366

367

368

369

370

371

372

373

374

375

376

377

378

379

380

381

382

383

384

385

386

387

388

389

390

391

392

393

394

395

396

397

398

399

400

401

402

403

404

405

406

407

408

409

410

411

412

413

414

415

416

417

418

419

420

421

422

423

424

425

426

427

428

429

430

431

432

433

434

435

436

437

438

439

440

441

442

443

444

445

446

447

448

449

450

451

452

453

454

455

456

457

458

459

460

461

462

463

464

465

466

467

468

469

470

471

472

473

474

475

476

477

478

479

480

481

482

483

484

485

486

487

488

489

490

491

492

493

494

495

496

497

498

499

500

501 502

503

504

505

506

507

508

509

510

511

512

513

514

515

516

517

518

519

520

521

522

523

524

525

526

527

528

529

530

531

532

533

534

535

536

537

538

539

540

541

542

543

544

545

546

547

548

549

550

551

552

553

554

555

556

557

558

559

560

561

562

563

564

565

566

567

568

569

570

571

572

573

574

575

576

577

578

579

580

581

582

583

584

585

586

587

588

589

590

591

592

593

594

595

596

597

598

599

600

601

602

603

604

605

606

607

608

609

610

611

612

613

614

615

616

617

618

619

620

621

622

623

624

625

626

627

628

629

630

631

632

633

634

635

636

637

638

639

640

641

642

643

644

645

646

647

648

649

650

651

652

653

654

655

656

657

658

659

660

661

662

663

664

665

666

667

668

669

670

671

672

673

674

675

676

677

678

679

680

681

682

683

684

685

686

687

688

689

690

691

692

693

694

695

696

697

698

699

700

701

702

703

704

705

706

707

708

709

710

711

712

713

714

715

716

717

718

719

720

721

722

723

724

725

726

727

728

729

730

731

732

733

734

735

736

737

738

739

740

741

742

743

744

745

746

747

748

749

750

751

752

753

754

755

756

757

758

759

760

761

762

763

764

765

766

767

768

769

770

771

772

773

774

775

776

777

778

779

780

781

782

783

784

785

786

787

788

789

790

791

792

793

794

795

796

797

798

799

800

801

802

803

804

805

806

807

808

809

810

811

812

813

814

815

816

817

818

819

820

821

822

823

824

825

826

827

828

829

830

831

832

833

834

835

836

837

838

839

840

841

842

843

844

845

846

847

848

849

850

851

852

853

854

855

856

857

858

859

860

861

862

863

864

865

866

867

868

869

870

871

872

873

874

875

876

877

878

879

880

881

882

883

884

885

886

887

888

889

890

891

892

893

894

895

896

897

898

899

900

901

902

903

904

905

906

907

908

909

910

911

912

913

914

915

916

917

918

919

920

921

922

923

924

925

926

927

928

929

930

931

932

933

934

935

936

937

938

939

940

941

942

943

944

945

946

947

948

949

950

951

952

953

954

955

956

957

958

959

960

961

962

963

964

965

966

967

968

969

970

971

972

973

974

975

976

977

978

979

980

981

982

983

984

985

986

987

988

989

990

991

992

993

994

995

996

997

998

999

1000

1001

1002

1003

1004

1005

1006

1007

1008

1009

1010

1011

1012

1013

1014

1015

1016

1017

1018

1019

1020

1021

1022

1023

1024

1025

1026

1027

1028

1029

1030

1031

1032

1033

1034

1035

1036

1037

1038

1039

1040

1041

1042

1043

1044

1045

1046

1047

1048

1049

1050

1051

1052

1053

1054

1055

1056

1057

1058

1059

1060

1061

1062

1063

1064

1065

1066

1067

1068

1069

1070

1071

1072

1073

1074

1075

1076

1077

1078

1079

1080

1081

1082

1083

1084

1085

1086

1087

1088

1089

1090

1091

1092

1093

1094

1095

1096

1097

1098

1099

1100

1101

1102

1103

1104

1105

1106

1107 1108

1109

1110

1111

1112

1113

1114

1115

1116

1117

1118

1119

1120

1121

1122

1123

1124

1125

1126

1127

1128

1129

1130

1131

1132

1133

1134

1135

1136

1137

1138

1139

1140

1141

1142

1143

1144

1145

1146

1147

1148

1149

1150

1151

1152

1153

1154

1155

1156

1157

1158

1159

1160

1161

1162

1163

1164

1165

1166

1167

1168

1169

1170

1171

1172

1173

1174

1175

1176

1177

1178

1179

1180

1181

1182

1183

1184

1185

1186

1187

1188

1189

1190

1191

1192

1193

1194

1195

1196

1197

1198

1199

1200

1201

1202

1203

1204

1205

1206

1207

1208

1209

1210

1211

1212

1213

1214

1215

1216

1217

1218

1219

1220

1221

1222

1223

1224

1225

1226

1227

1228

1229

1230

1231

1232

1233

1234

1235

1236

1237

1238

1239

1240

1241

1242

1243

1244

1245

1246

1247

1248

1249

1250

1251

1252

1253

1254

1255

1256

1257

1258

1259

1260

1261

1262

1263

1264

1265

1266

1267

1268

1269

1270

1271

1272

1273

1274

1275

1276

1277

1278

1279

1280

1281

1282

1283

1284

1285

1286

1287

1288

1289

1290

1291

1292

1293

1294

1295

1296

1297

1298

1299

1300

1301

1302

1303

1304

1305

1306

1307

1308

1309

1310

1311

1312

1313

1314

1315

1316

1317

1318

1319

1320

1321

1322

1323

1324

1325

1326

1327

1328

1329

1330

1331

1332

1333

1334

1335

1336

1337

1338

1339

1340

1341

1342

1343

1344

1345

1346

1347

1348

1349

1350

1351

1352

1353

1354

1355

1356

1357

1358

1359

1360

1361

1362

1363

1364

1365

1366

1367

1368

1369

1370

1371

1372

1373

1374

1375

1376

1377

1378

1379

1380

1381

1382

1383

1384

1385

1386

1387

1388

1389

1390

1391

1392

1393

1394

1395

1396

1397

1398

1399

1400

1401

1402

1403

1404

1405

1406

1407

1408

1409

1410

1411

1412

1413

1414

1415

1416

1417

1418

1419

1420

1421

1422

1423

1424

1425

1426

1427

1428

1429

1430

1431

1432

1433

1434

1435

1436

1437

1438

1439

1440

1441

1442

1443

1444

1445

1446

1447

1448

1449

1450

1451

1452

1453

1454

1455

1456

1457

1458

1459

1460

1461

1462

1463

1464

1465

1466

1467

1468

1469

1470

1471

1472

1473

1474

1475

1476

1477

1478

1479

1480

1481

1482

1483

1484

1485

1486

1487

1488

1489

1490

1491

1492

1493

1494

1495

1496

1497

1498

1499

1500

1501

1502

1503

1504

1505

1506

1507

1508

1509

1510

1511

1512

1513

1514

1515

1516

1517

1518

1519

1520

1521

1522

1523

1524

1525

1526

1527

1528

1529

1530

1531

1532

1533

1534

1535

1536

1537

1538

1539

1540

1541

1542

1543

1544

1545

1546

1547

1548

1549

1550

1551

1552

1553

1554

1555

1556

1557

1558

1559

1560

1561

1562

1563

1564

1565

1566

1567

1568

1569

<

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

AGAMEMNON	King of Argos
CLYTEMNESTRA	His Wife
ORESTES	Their Son
ELECTRA	Their Daughter
CASSANDRA	Daughter of Priam, King of Troy
ÆGISTHUS	Second Husband of Clytemnestra and a cousin of Agamemnon
PYLADES	Friend of Orestes
CALLIRHOE	One of Electra's Maidens
TALTHYBIOS	} Old Men of Argos
EURYBATES
OTHER ARGIVE ELDERS
WATCHMAN
A SERVANT

THE FURIES

Chorus of Old Men. Chorus of Libation-Pourers.

Soldiers, Sailors, Captives, and Common People.

A period of ten years elapses between the first and second Acts.

ORESTES, A TRAGEDY

ACT I

SCENE I

Portico of the old palace of the Atreidæ. Just before dawn. Argos dimly seen between the columns of the palace. The Furies go silently to and fro in the shadows. The day dawns. The Furies disappear.

Old men of Argos enter, leaning on their staves, and divide into two groups, to right and left of the stage. Talthybios and Eurybates stand somewhat in front.

TALTHYBIOS.

Ten years are almost gone, and still no sight
Of their returning sails! For ten long years,
There on the palace roof, the watchman counts
The stars, and sings to keep himself awake;
But still no beacon fire from Ida flares,
In æry signal, on from cape to cape.

EURYBATES.

Was ever such a fleet upon the sea,
Or such an armoured hum of fighting souls!
'Twas hard to be old men, Talthybios,

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

Good but to stay at home with women and babes,
'Mid all that gleam of bronze and flash of oars,
And see their high-pooped galleys sail away.

TALTHYBIOS.

All for a woman's face—a painted flower!
So many ships, such treasure of strong men,
Beautiful strength hoarded and husbanded,
And sternly tempered in the soldier's school,
All that heroic beat of noble hearts
To such an end—to bring a wanton home
To the dishonoured threshold of her lord!
O wizardry we softly name a woman,
Divider and destroyer of the world—
All for the face of Helen, Eurybates!

EURYBATES.

My heart is heavy thinking of them gone
These many years, some dying unknown deaths,
Far from the rites that bring the spirit peace,
And some in urns so softly coming home—
Think you that Agamemnon will return?

TALTHYBIOS.

Who knows but happier they that yonder fell,
And in an alien soil unquiet sleep,
Than some home-coming after all these years!
Yea! I can think of one who best had stayed
On guard at home, than faring to avenge

Richard Le Gallienne

---

Another's hearth; but, as the proverb is,
An ox be on our tongues, not ours to speak.

EURYBATES.

If stones had voices, the old house could tell
A pretty tale of these ten absent years.

TALTHYBIOS.

Alas! we are but withered-up old men,
Moving like shadows on the stable world,
With no power left us but the power of prayer.
O Zeus! that on the throne of yonder sky
Watches thro' veils of blue our little lives,
God of eternal justice, that through all
The wrath and wrong and welter of the world
Guards and guides safe the good to its good end,
Great Zeus, forget not Argos and its King!

(Enter the Watchman precipitately)

WATCHMAN.

The beacon fire! At last it flares to heaven—
Ilium is fallen and the King comes home.

TALTHYBIOS.

His wits are gone, with watching all these years.

WATCHMAN.

Nay, it is true—I saw it with these eyes.

(Enter Clytemnestra)

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Hail, friends! and share with me a new-found joy—
His tale is true: the æëry courier comes,
Speeding by many a sea-lone promontory,
A kiss of fire from Agamemnon's lips,
As though he snatched a brand from out the blaze
Of burning Troy and tossed it flaming to us—
Can you not hear the shouting and the crash
Of falling towers, the ruining of fire,
And all the wail and all the victory!

TALTHYBIOS.

We have grown old with waiting for this news,
And yet can scarce believe it. Is it true,
Or but a woman's hope that it be true?

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Am I a girl to bring tales out of dreams!
The watchman ran to me as still I slept,
And waked me with this wonder—and I saw,
Glorying the grey of dawn, the leaping light!
And all my life, that in a winter sleep
Went darkling for his face these widowed years,
Sent up a light of joy to answer it—
And then I lost it in a storm of tears,
That, like an April window, smote my eyes;
And still again I looked, and still it burned.
Let Argos put its wedding garment on,
And sing for joy, and be a child again,

Richard Le Gallienne

---

For Agamemnon's ships are on the sea,
And homeward sunshine lights the warrior's face.
Old friends, bear witness for me when he comes,
That I, true wife, have faithfully bestowed
His various trust, nor broke one seal of his
On chest or treasure, nor till now have known
A joy without him all these waiting years.

(Exit)

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

SCENE 2

Enter Talthybios, Eurybates and Chorus of Old Men.

EURYBATES.

I hear a murmur, like the roar of streams!

TALTHYBIOS.

A multitudinous voice of mighty joy!

EURYBATES.

The call of trumpets, and the clash of arms,
And the hoarse sea-like song of victory!—
It is the King—the people rend the sky.

TALTHYBIOS.

Zeus save us from the Furies in the shade!

EURYBATES.

Old evil hangs about the ancient doors,
And in the sunlight sable shadows steal,
And at the windows watching spectres stand;
God grant a happy issue to this day!

(A sound of people marching and singing. They enter and surround the palace, followed by processions of warriors and sailors and Trojan captives, till finally Agamemnon and Clytemnestra enter in a chariot, with Cassandra, and the principal captains of the Argive army)

Richard Le Gallienne

---

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Welcome, my King, and welcome, husband, home!
The old house of your fathers laughs once more,
That was so long a place of woman's tears;
And the old faithful love spreads out its arms,
To take you to your ancient place again.
Not, stitch by stitch, a woman's tale I'll tell
Here, in this laurelled hour, of all my fears,
Of lying tales that came on travelling lips,
And omens of the night, and whispered things
Of sea and wind, that moaned about the house,
Nor of a mother's aching heart will speak,
That scans your sunlit laurels all in vain
For the white flower of Iphigenia's face.
Let glory and gladness have their lyric hour,
And praise of the high gods that brought you home,
With such a harvest of undying deeds!
Whiles as we wept and waited, woman-like,
Through the long afternoons, against this hour,
We wove, with shuttles of our faithful hearts,
This tapestry for your victorious feet,
Patterned and purpled for a conqueror's tread—
'Twas all a woman's little might availed

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

To have a part in this resounding day.
Disdain not, Agamemnon, then to walk
Upon this pathway of our woven tears.

(As she ends, maidens spread tapestry before the feet of Agamemnon)

AGAMEMNON.

Argos again! First greetings unto you,
Belovèd land, and to the holy gods
Bowed heads and hearts, that had you in their care
These many years; with wordless joy I greet
All the old lovely faithful face of things,
Temples and towers and ways familiar,
And my old friends and my dear wife and home.
Long is the tale to tell of all our deeds
Since 'gainst the Trojan hosts we sailed away,
And saw your faces fade, and the sea wind
Went fluttering in and out through your farewells;
'Twill serve the hearth for many a winter's tale
And minstrel's song—enough that we have done
The work of Zeus, and Troy's adulterous towers
Are towers of wreathing smoke and licking flame:
So prosper evil-doing on the earth,
And insolence of lust and mortal pride;
For Heaven is just, and vengeance never sleeps.

(Turning to Clytemnestra, and pointing to the tapestry at his feet)

Richard Le Gallienne

---

Nay, let barbaric kings on purple tread,
Such state is not for us who know the gods,
How jealous they of mortal majesty,
And the brief pomp of swollen emperors:
The holy soil of Argos let me tread,
Whence am I sprung, and whither I descend.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

'Tis but a woman's fancy—let me have it.

AGAMEMNON.

A woman's fancy burned the towers of Troy.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Nay, let me have this happiness to-day.

AGAMEMNON.

Be't so, then, Clytemnestra,—but yon sun
Be witness that my heart wears no such pride.

(Pointing to Cassandra)

This princess, captive to our conquering arms,
The flowering last of a long line of kings,
Take with a royal kindness to your care:
'Tis gracious and well-pleasing to the gods
Mildly to wield the rod of victory.

(Agamemnon enters the palace followed by Clytemnestra and attendants)

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

(Re-enter Clytemnestra, addressing Cassandra, who stands mute and immobile, in the chariot)

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Nay, follow us, Cassandra, whom my lord
Regards with such a kindness in his eye,
Fear not such entertainment as a house
Of kings to a king's daughter may not lack,
Though she in chains.

(Cassandra makes no sign of hearing)

TALTHYBIOS.

Do you not hear the Queen?

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Hath she no understanding of our tongue?
When Agamemnon spake, she seemed to hear.

TALTHYBIOS.

The Queen commands you enter in the house.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Tell her, some one of you that knows her speech,
When Clytemnestra bids she must obey,
Were she ten times the daughter of a king.
I may not tarry longer, see you to it.

(Enters the palace)

Richard Le Gallienne

---

CASSANDRA. (Slowly turning toward a statue of Apollo, and suddenly crying out)

Apollo—O Apollo! Woe is me!

What house is this that smells of infants' blood?

TALTHYBIOS.

This is the house of Atreus and his sons.

CASSANDRA.

O bitter god! so to misguide my feet!

O cruel love! O too great punishment!

TALTHYBIOS.

Why to Apollo make you such appeal?

CASSANDRA.

Once, in a frenzy of immortal love,

He touched my maiden lips with prophecy,

And then, all anger, made his gift in vain;

For lo! the fearful future like a scroll

Clearly I read, but no man hearkens me.

(Suddenly shrieks as in horror)

TALTHYBIOS.

Why do you gaze so strangely on the air?

CASSANDRA.

See yonder, see you not? those wailing babes

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

There on the palace roof—and whence this fume
Of burning flesh . . . O horrible! I see
A father's children murdered for his food!

EURYBATES.

'Tis very strange, Talthybios; yea, she sees
Thyestes' meal of his own little ones,
That Atreus carved for him on plates of gold.

TALTHYBIOS.

Surely she hath some vision of the god—
But mark her now . . .

CASSANDRA.

O fearful house, all dabbled o'er with blood . . .
Blood, blood, in all the rooms; blood everywhere,
The whole red air one steam and song of blood;
And a dark sound of wings that well I know
In all the stairways and the corridors!
Yet, yet more blood I see . . .
The woman yonder—plain I see it all —
Even at this moment, murders in a dream . . .
Yea! her own lord it is—I see his face . . .
She traps him yonder in a silver bath—
The smooth white heifer gores the royal bull!
Horror! Yea! also my own end I see . . .
Ah! bitter god that brought me here to die!

EURYBATES.

You are distraught . . . here is no more than madness.

CASSANDRA.

Yea! it was ever so! No man believes—
Though now the very act hangs in the air,
Gathering its lightning. So Troy mocked me once,
Turning deaf ears to all my warning cry.
The flaming towers I saw—they would not hear;
The shattered shrines, the falling palaces!
I saw Scamandros choked with heroes dead,
My river where, a maid, I gathered flowers;
I saw my father lying in his blood,
And all my brothers dead, with broken swords.
They would not hear—so cruel was the god—
And who is left in Troy to hear me now!
Belovèd land, no prophecy could save!
O double doom—in vain to see the doom,
Like one who calls out wildly in a dream,
And finds no help, held fast in horror's arms.
So to my death through yonder door I go,—
May the god meet me on the other side,
And give me back his love, and lift this curse
That makes me half immortal all in vain.

(Breaks her wand, and unwinds her wreaths and casts them from her)

So throw I off these weeds of prophecy,
A doomed and simple woman of the earth.

(Again becoming entranced and gazing at the air)

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

Nay! but it will not leave me, still it seems
The visions throng . . . horror on horror breeds . . .

And a dim day of which this day is father
I see approaching, as a royal boy
Waxes to manhood, exiled from his home;
A day on which a son shall slay his mother,
To avenge the father whose last mortal cry
Is at this moment shaping on his lips,
And but awaits the opening of a door . . .

TALTHYBIOS.

Speak not such fearful things—we dare not hear.

CASSANDRA.

Strange that for you all this is yet to do;
To me they are as dead a thousand years,
And I a woman talking in a grave . . .

(Half opens the palace door)

Pah! like a grave it smells, this opening door . . .
I dare not enter—yea! sweet death, I dare.

(Enters the palace)

TALTHYBIOS.

She seems the very body of my fears,
The coming true of my most midnight thoughts.

Richard Le Gallienne

---

EURYBATES.

Unhappy house! Will the sun never warm,
Nor the stars bless you, as in days of old!

TALTHYBIOS.

Nay! Fate's long shadow on the old house lies,
And the eternal ache of ancient sin
Curses the youngest heart in its old halls.

EURYBATES.

The stain of blood no man shall wash away.

TALTHYBIOS.

Only new blood new-shed shall wash it clean;
Till the last drop of recompense be paid,
Still shall the victims bleed, and still the house
Be made of shadows and doom and horror and death.

(A cry in the palace)

AGAMEMNON.

My sword! Give me my sword!

TALTHYBIOS.

What was that fearful cry!

EURYBATES.

Was it the King!

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

AGAMEMNON. (Within)
Cowards! Ah, God! I die!

TALTHYBIOS.
'Tis Agamemnon!

ALL. (Wildly in fear and confusion)
Is it the King?

EURYBATES.
We are so old, so old . . .

TALTHYBIOS.
'Tis Agamemnon going to his doom.

EURYBATES.
Shall we not go and knock upon the door . . .
Maybe . . .

(Confused sounds within. The crowd murmurs, overawed and irresolute)

TALTHYBIOS.
The girl said right—Death waited there inside . . .
Though my old limbs shake, I will to the door.

(The palace door is suddenly thrown open. Enter Clytemnestra, sword in hand, her robe stained with blood)

Richard Le Gallienne

---

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Yea! he is dead! I killed him with these hands.
Do what you will with me, you men of Argos!
My daughter is avenged, her innocent blood
Is paid for, and the man you called your King
Lies yonder dead beside his concubine—
Princess of Troy and prophetess forsooth!
But I must needs be patient, play the wife,
The humble fool and footstool of my lord!
Nay, in that hour, when, pitiless, he tore
Iphigenia from me, all my life,
That ran with woman-sweetness in my veins,
Turned to a deadly venom, and I swore
A mother's vengeance on her cruel sire.
And, had I joy to see the beacon flare—
Yea! for I knew the hour at last was come.
Now shall the shade of my poor little one
Wander no more, nor guilt of children's blood,
Unhallowed, hang on the infected air.

TALTHYBIOS.

Woman, you rob our ancient tongues of speech—
Can you so boast of so accurst a deed!

CLYTEMNESTRA.

The deed was good, and I am filled with joy,
And face the coming days with steadfast heart.
I hated Agamemnon,—he is dead;
I love Ægisthus—he, my husband, lives;

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

And Argos, its old phantoms fled away,
Shall see the golden age come back once more.

TALTHYBIOS.

For us no King whose wife must murder for him—
The son of Agamemnon is our King.

EURYBATES.

Yea! what of him, Orestes, whom you sent Bond-slave to Phokis—he shall be our King.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

No bond-slave he, but in the pious care
Of an old kinsman; he is yet a boy,
Too young to rule, and I would shield his youth
Far from this fearful Fury-haunted air.

TALTHYBIOS.

Nay, woman, tell us no such empty tale—
The very children here in Argos know,
The very stones, and shall the gods not know!
Yea! we are old, and all our strength is dust,
All that is left us now our sure sad eyes—
Beware of what the eyes of aged men
See, Clytemnestra, in the glass of time.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Peace! I hear naught but dotard wagging tongues.

Richard Le Gallienne

---

(Ægisthus enters, and stands by Clytemnestra's side. Facing the people, she takes his hand and looks proudly into his face)

Here is your King, Ægisthus,—and my lord!

TALTHYBIOS.

You will remember—when Orestes comes.

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

ACT II

SCENE I

Argos. Palace of the Atreidæ on the left. On the right, the tomb of Agamemnon, a mound overgrown with grasses and wild flowers. Further back to the right, rocks and trees. Time—Spring.

(Enter Orestes and Pylades from hiding among the rocks)

ORESTES.

O Pylades, is this my father's grave?
The man that made me out of rocks and dreams—
My father, Pylades, does he lie here?
This warrior that has changed to little flowers!
And all the sound that once was sword and spear
Is nothing but a thought upon a grave.
I know the lot of man upon the earth,
Young as I am, dear father lying there,
The tasks of men so stern and terrible,
And all the stormy terror of the fate
Of him who holds a nation in his hands.
How can a woman know what we must do—
The dreadful duties that belong to kings;

Richard Le Gallienne

---

She has one little baby on her breast,
And that to her is all the singing world:
But God put in our hearts the sound of war,
And the wild love of fighting for our land.
I was so small a lad, and only knew
The roughness of your beard against my cheek,
And all the lonely strength of your sad eyes;
But the gods sent you to me in many dreams,
Where I, a captive in a little isle,
Would hear you nightly call me, hear you say,
"Orestes, in that hour you are a man,
Return to Argos, and avenge your sire":
And, when the manhood grew upon my cheek,
To Delphi, at the gold Apollo's shrine,
I knelt for counsel, and his word was this—
"Follow your father's slayers through the world."
Thus am I here to lay upon your grave
My tears, my love, this lock of votive hair,
And all the holy purpose of my life . . .

(He lays a lock of hair on the grave and turns again to Pylades)

How strange yon daisy, such a peaceful thing,
The children's toy, dare bloom there unafraid,
And the soft grass move idle in the wind,
Where the great King, all thunder and all doom,
My father, Agamemnon, takes his sleep!

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

(Electra enters, followed by maidens bearing funeral libations)

Whose face is this with eyes so holy with sorrow
This April day—and all these weeping maidens following her?

PYLADES.

It is Electra—let us draw aside
Within the shadows of the rocks and trees;
She brings her tears too to your father's grave.

(Orestes and Pylades withdraw)

ELECTRA. (Approaching Agamemnon's tomb)

Father, dread king, and in the world of ghosts
Still Agamemnon, I, your daughter, bring
These flowers of April and these offerings
Of honey and wine to your immortal sleep,
And on your stern and solemn sepulchre
Pour a child's love and make a childish prayer:
O send Orestes back to save our land,
Our golden Argos turned into a sty
Of luxury effeminate and foul,
Once such a land of soldiers and of gods—
Ah! send him back, my brother, with his sword,
To purge yon palace and to cleanse the shrines.
There is no man in Argos now but slaves,
For the foul thing that stole my father's throne

Richard Le Gallienne

---

Put manhood into chains; I, a king's daughter,
Of a race divine, am but a slave
Within my father's house—yet I have dreams,
Dread dreams, that say the doom is coming on them,
The cleansing doom, and that Orestes' ship is on the sea.

(Enter Clytemnestra from the palace: she approaches the grave of Agamemnon, and addresses Electra)

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Child, it is well to weep upon this grave,
And bring him all the laurels of the world,
But you who love your father with such love,
Why follow up your mother with such hate?
How can you understand, or how I tell,
The sorrows of a mother in this world—
You but a maid that never carried here
A calling flower that needs a mother's breast:
You cannot know—ah! may you never know
What agony it is to see the babe
That grew in your young womb, a radiant thing,
Carried to death to save a race of fools.
You never yet have known that fearful thing—
To lie beside a man you did not love,
And yet be mother of his lovely babes:
Ah! blame me not, knowing I must not speak
Of Agamemnon all my dread of him,

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

I love Ægisthus—love came at the last,
After the long, long hatred of your sire,
And all the tears for Iphigenia's death.

ELECTRA.

Ah! mother, but I loved my father's face;
He was so beautiful and such a king!
I know so little yet of the sad world,
How can I know these strange deep things you say?
Only I know I loved my father's face,
And hate the sword that took it from my eyes—
That perfumed pretty copy of a king
That sits upon my father's golden throne.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Do we bear children, rear them in a dream,
And watch them growing in an ecstasy,
That when their faces mount as high as ours,
Their eyes dart flames out at us, and their tongues
Dare to talk thus! Daughter, beware, the gods
Have whips for thankless children.

ELECTRA.

The gods are with my grief, not with your sin.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Nay, but I'll find a way to rule your tongue,
And drive these fairy notions from your head.
How long in Argos is it that a child
Was set above its parent!

Richard Le Gallienne

---

ELECTRA.

Since my father's death—
I said his death—I used no other word.

CLYTEMNESTRA. (As if about to strike her)

The furies rend you! Do you see yon hind, Gnarled with long labour and borne down with years?

Thou shalt be his to keep his cottage bright,
Fetch wood and water and make soft his bed . . .

ELECTRA.

Better the wife of such than of your lord.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

His shall you be ere nightfall—by the gods!

ELECTRA.

I see the gods—their backs are turned on you.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

O holy Zeus! my dream! so went my dream.

(Exit, holding her hands on high, as in despair and supplication)

ELECTRA. (Again approaching Agamemnon's tomb and throwing more flowers)

O send Orestes back to save our land!

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

(Finds lock of hair on the tomb, and starts back)

Callirhoë, what is this! a lock of hair!
A man's short curl,—Callirhoë, what is this!
Is there a man in Argos, after all?
A man's short curl! O might I see his face
Who dares thus honour Agamemnon's tomb,
Who thus in secret loves my father's grave!

CALLIRHOE.

It is most strange—and look you here and here,
Mistress, the new-made footsteps of a man . . .

ELECTRA.

If it should be Orestes . . .

CALLIRHOE.

But mark these strangers coming from the grove.

(Enter Orestes and Pylades)

ORESTES. (Addressing Electra)

Lady, two travellers we from Phokis come.

ELECTRA.

Phokis! my brother! speak . . . your news, your news!

ORESTES.

I heard your prayers, but first the gods have heard:

Richard Le Gallienne

---

Orestes is in Argos, 'tis his hair
You hold there in your hand.

ELECTRA.

Orestes here! O sirs, is your news true?

ORESTES.

As true as I stand up to tell it here.

ELECTRA.

O holy Zeus! and thou tremendous shade!
Not all in vain the broken-hearted pray,
But the blue heavens give ear, and the dread powers

Of the dark grave work toward their answer.
But, sirs, what token bring you of your truth?
News strange as yours needs witness scarce less strange.

Before I desperately dare believe
Words like the sacred lightning blinding me,
Give me some sign this is no cruel dream.

ORESTES.

Sister, I am Orestes.

ELECTRA.

You!

ORESTES.

Yea, I.

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

ELECTRA.

Orestes!

ORESTES.

See where but now I severed from my head
The lock you found upon our father's grave,
And see

(Opening his mantle, and showing a little robe that he carries)

this little robe, with figures wrought
Of dog and fawn, the same you wove when I,
A little lad, went to the Phokian isle;
And see upon my brow the scar I got Me in some childish hurt.

ELECTRA.

It is Orestes . . . O 'tis wonderful!
My heart will break. It is too great a joy . . .

(Seems as if about to fall fainting into Orestes' arms)

ORESTES.

Sister, dear sister, hide your heart awhile;
So many eyes surround us, so many ears;
I too would hold you here against my heart,
And so shall hold you when my work is done.

Richard Le Gallienne

---

ELECTRA.

Orestes—my Orestes, who to me
Must father be, and mother, and yourself,
And my lost sister given to the gods;
At least my eyes may hold you to my breast,
Eyes that have watched ten years for this one hour,
Waited and watched and wept ten leaden years . . .

ORESTES.

The time of tears is gone—the hour of blood
Draws nigh . . . then doom, and ghostly laughter
Of the outraged gods, and at last peace,
Because the price is paid.
Electra, life is strange and terrible,
A web woven by unseen fingers in the grave,
And stained by dreadful doings not our own;
The deeds of fathers that destroy their sons,
And make their daughters fair and flitting things.
Voices and dreams and phantoms, things of air
And the dim dust, rule all this stable show
Of granite and grandeur that we call the world:
And we young creatures know not what we do,
Save that we do the bidding of a dream;
And know not where we go, save that we take
The pathway pointed by some shadowy hand;
And what we are we know not, save that we
Are things of magic sorrow and magic joy,
And deeds and dooms tremendous, and then—dust.

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

ELECTRA.

Did the dreams come to you as well as me?
Faces and cries and fingers in the night,
And a long wailing through the sleeping halls . . .

ORESTES.

Yea, and my father came in his war-gear,
Stood in the moonlight, and called out my name:
A god he seemed, all gold and glorious;
His voice was like a battle in the night,
And sternly sweet as trumpets in the dawn.
There in the moon he froze me with the tale
Of the dog's death they dealt to a great king,
The bath in which they trapped him, and the net
Meshing the might and fury of his limbs;
The pale-faced blundering stabbings of a foe
That needs must call a woman to the work,
Nor even murder bravely like a man.
There in the moon he stretched his maimèd arms,
Suppliant, toward me, for they dare not leave
The piteous corse its great war-wielding hands,
Lest he should pull them down into his grave—
And, as the day was breaking, he would end:
"Orestes, in that hour you are a man,
Return to Argos, and avenge your sire."

ELECTRA.

So to me came he many a haunted night.

Richard Le Gallienne

---

ORESTES.

But there were other hauntings—voices in my blood
Calling for vengeance, dreadful urgings-on Within the very marrow of my bones,
And my whole body, as I came to man,
Grew more and more a horrid instrument
To work the retribution of the gods;
All my young days passed in a dream of blood,
And all my boyish sport to see him die;
My very thews and sinews dreamed of him,
And slew and slew and slew him in my sleep,
Again and yet again, through all those years.
At length it seemed the deed was ripe to do,
And I at Delphi, in Apollo's shrine,
Bowed low my head, for counsel of the god.
Like some cold star, the silver, solemn voice
Spake in the holy silence, bidding me
Forth on this sacred errand of my sword,
And warning me beware the fate of sons
To whom the blood of fathers cries in vain:
For, unassuaged, the ghosts of murdered men
Wander below, unhonoured of the dead,
And their spilt blood, till blood be spilt again,
Takes monstrous forms, and breeds unhallowed shapes
Of madness and of poison.

ELECTRA.

Had I a hundred lives I'd give them all,

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

So he might hear the solace underground,
Of blood soft dripping, rain-like, on his grave.

ORESTES.

Yea, sister, such a grief for such a wrong
Needs not the urgency of a threatening god:
It is enough to have a father slain,
Electra for a sister, and one's land
Beneath the bloody heel of brazen lust.
O sacred Argos, little golden land,
So big with deeds illustrious, chosen realm
Of men so godlike that the gods themselves
Mate here with mortals, and immortal feet
Walk up and down the rocky winding ways,
Fellows and friends of our humanity . . .
At last impatient youth has grown to man,
And here at last I bring my virgin sword,
Sacred to Argos, servant of the sky,
And executioner of the will of heaven.
Now, sister, mark me what my counsel is:
Pylades here, my friend and sword-fellow,
And I will first seek audience of the queen,
Feigning us Phokian merchants, bringing news
Of my own death—the rest shall follow on.
But now no more of words—the hour is here,
O sweet-breathed hour! O blessed shining day!
Vengeance at last—O father hear my vow,
And great Apollo watch if I do well.

(Pours libation on the tomb)

ELECTRA.

An unknown fear is on me—fail us not,
Dread shade, in this your own appointed hour.

ORESTES.

Fate, and not we, binds fast their hands with doom,
The stroke of destiny goes not astray.

(Orestes and Pylades approach the door of the palace and knock)

ORESTES.

What ho! there.

(Enter servant)

SERVANT.

What would you, sirs?

ORESTES.

We seek the lord and lady of this realm,
With messages of high importance charged.

(Enter Clytemnestra)

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Speak! I am Clytemnestra.

ORESTES.

Lady, I bring a message to this house
I were right glad some other hand had brought:

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

To be the croaking messenger of ill,
And bearer of bad news to lofty kings,
No man desires, nor can welcome hope
As he who bears some long awaited joy
Singing about him. Would, lady, that I brought
Some unhop'd accident of heart's desire; •
But I, alas! have bitter news to tell,
Drear to a mother's heart . . .

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Sir, speak your news—you make too many words—
And count on welcome as befits this house.
(Aside) Where have I seen those strange grey eyes before!

ORESTES.

I ask your pardon, lady, it was fear
To wound too suddenly with cruel news
That made me wince about to tell it you—
But know that Pylades, my friend, and I
Are Phokian merchants here with merchandise,
And, ere we sailed, knowing us hither bound,
Strophios came hurriedly and bade us tell
To those that reigned in Argos how their son,
Entrusted to his keeping these ten years,
Is on a sudden dead . . .

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Orestes dead!

Nothing but woe! Will the curse never end!

Richard Le Gallienne

---

ELECTRA. (Aside)

This day it ends.

(Aloud) Orestes dead! then let Electra die!

(Covers her face with her mantle and feigns to weep)

ALL.

Woe! woe! Orestes dead! Orestes dead!

ORESTES.

Alas! unhappy tongue such grief to make!

But I must needs be faithful to my word—

And further Strophios said, and then an end:

The little urn, with laurel twined around,

Waits there in Phokis—on your royal will,

There to be buried, or across the sea

Brought home to Argos and his sleeping sire.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

And we had dreamed that in yon little isle,

All peace and wandering waves, he should escape

The doom that here infects the very air,

And fills the land with phantoms—but in vain

Man schemes against the purpose of the gods.

ELECTRA. (Aside)

In vain, be sure, in vain.

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

CLYTEMNESTRA.

But I must call my lord to hear your news—
Go, one of you, and find the lord Ægisthus.
Tell him that news of import grave awaits
His presence here.

And you, good sirs, must needs
Be travel-weary; enter in our house,
And find such welcome as the best of news
Could not have bettered. Come, my handmaids shall Straightway prepare the soothing bath for you—
(Aside)
Where have I seen those strange grey eyes before!

ORESTES. (Aside)

The soothing bath!

(Clytemnestra, Orestes and Pylades enter the palace)

(Enter Ægisthus, accompanied by servant)

ÆGISTHUS.

Strangers from Phokis, say you?

SERVANT.

Yes, my lord.

ELECTRA. (Addressing Ægisthus)

Good news is waiting for you in the house.

ÆGISTHUS.

What do you mean, Electra?

ELECTRA.

You may sleep safe within your stolen sheets;
Orestes is no more.

ÆGISTHUS.

Orestes dead!

ELECTRA.

Did I not say the news was good, Ægisthus!
Poor phantom! Painted fungus of a man!
The thing that grows up out of great men's graves!
Only a girl left—are you brave enough,
Think you, to try conclusions with a girl?

ÆGISTHUS.

Orestes dead!

ELECTRA.

Seems it too good for true?

ÆGISTHUS.

Hell-kitten, spare your little saucy words,
My thoughts were far back in a bloody hour:
I saw my brothers and the horrid feast—
The mangled flesh of his belovèd sons,
Your father's sire served at my father's board;

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

You see but Agamemnon—I Atreus see,
And my young brothers slain—like kitchen offal,
Butcher's carrion, food of kites and crows,
Set smoking 'neath my father's shuddering eyes—
Foul jest too foul even for a devil's mind—
Your brother, what of him! See what I see!

ELECTRA.

Nay, but I see beyond—Thyestes see,
Your father who my father's mother took Into his shameless arms—like son, like sire!—
And slimed the house of Atreus, as the son
The house of Agamemnon makes his sty.

ÆGISTHUS.

The gods see all—would all this blood might end!

ELECTRA.

Into the house . . . there may be better news.

(Electra approaches the door of the palace, and stands in a listening attitude against it)

The house is full of murmurs, like a wood
Before a storm; strange feet move to and fro,
And muffled voices—boding unshaped sounds . . .
Ah! the clash of swords! Yes! Yes! again, again!
Again, Orestes! Kill him ten times o'er!

(A cry is heard in the palace)

O father, did you hear Ægisthus cry!

(Ægisthus cries within)

ÆGISTHUS. (Within)

Help! I am slain!

SERVANT. (Rushing in)

Help! help! they kill the King!

ALL.

The King, they kill the King!

(Enter Orestes, sword in hand, followed by Pylades)

ORESTES.

One dog the less in Argos!

ELECTRA.

My brave Orestes!

(Orestes stands as in a dream, silent for some moments. Then rouses himself)

ORESTES.

O but the other task, my Pylades!

I cannot slay a woman, Pylades!

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

PYLADES.

Courage! remember, 'tis the gods that slay—
They strike but with your hand.

ORESTES.

A son to slay a mother—nay, I dare not.

PYLADES.

That must you dare—or dare the wrath of heaven.
Do you forget the voice in Delphi's shrine?

ORESTES.

O let them send their lightnings—why this hand!

ELECTRA.

Remember what you swore on yonder grave;
Give me your sword, if you have fear to use it.

(Enter Clytemnestra)

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Woe! they have slain the beautiful Ægisthus!
O bloody deed, thrice cursed be the hand
That smote my sunlit tower of a man!
O child unnatural! O womb unstarred
That gave such offspring to the bleeding day!

ORESTES.

Dare you to love him still!—then dare to go
The way he went—my sword shall point the way.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

What, monster! would you slay your mother too!

ORESTES.

Mother, it is too late to call me son—

“Son” died with my father. This sword-bearing shape

Is not a son, it is the thing Heaven makes
Of murdered fathers, and its name is—Death.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

You would not kill your mother!

ORESTES.

’Tis not I, ’tis your own deed that kills you,

’Tis the day you killed my father

Kills my mother now. You should have thought on this,

The hour you smote yon golden warrior down,
And, robed in crimson of his sacred blood,
Made a new nuptial couch upon his grave.

CLYTEMNESTRA. (Baring her bosom, in supplication)

Can you strike here where you so soft have lain,
And, with vague little lips in the still night,
Sought in a trusting blindness for your food,
Murmured and muttered and battled for this breast
With baby fingers, and at length found peace,

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

And sleep, all perfumed quiet and milk-white dreams—

Ah! little fingers, grown to wield a sword!

ORESTES.

Remind me not of that, lest it should seem
I but revenge myself for the affront
Nature put on me, making you my mother.
Mock not the name that I must never use,
The holy word more happy sons than I Wear in their hearts,—foul not the name of mother.

Nay! bare your breast to him down there in hell,
Who with his lecherous kisses long ago
Defiled the milky purpose of that flower;
A witchcraft fairness, sweet and soft for sin,
A lover's toy, a wanton honey-guide
To snare the soul of manhood down to death—
No breast for honest babes . . .

CLYTEMNESTRA.

If pity move you not, have you no fear?
A mother's blood—it is a sacred thing.

ORESTES.

Is not a father's blood a sacred thing!
I hear it calling out through all your words,
And the gods calling . . .

CLYTEMNESTRA.

The gods are very strange—who knows the gods!
What man is he full sure of their intent!
Me too the gods befriend—if not this hour,
Some bitter day to come, when you shall go
Hunted across the world by night-black hounds,
Whose eyes, like burning lamps, shall never close.
Man may with man take side, but nature's heart
Is kind to mothers, whispers oracles
Into a woman's ear unknown to man:
Let Agamemnon have his gods, yet Heaven
Has somewhere kindness for a woman too,
And he who sent my daughter to the fire
Shall not go scatheless in the courts of Heaven.

ORESTES.

My sister died for Argos—'twas the gods,
Not Agamemnon, snatched her from your side.
'Twas but the fearful office of a king,
Who more than wife or child or sister dear,
Or father or mother, must hold dear his land.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

Argos and Agamemnon and the gods!
What are all these but hollow boom of words,
That have no meaning in a woman's ear
That holds her human blossom in her hands.
Better a land forswear such gods as crave
A mother's heart-break and a maiden's blood—
Let Argos die for Argos, not my child!

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

ORESTES.

Beware, in this last flutter of your breath,
How you offend the holy presences
That watch this moment with their awful eyes.
O mother, go not sacrilegious hence
That hath so black a burden on your soul,
Nay, rather with some grace of contrite words
Take your last look of yon all-seeing sun,
For my young heart must still believe the gods,
And do my father's bidding, though I die.

CLYTEMNESTRA.

I do believe you do you know not what,
And you the victim are as well as I;
And fain I would call back those fearful hounds
Whose hot and hurrying breath is on the air.
Yes! take me to him then, for I would sleep
By that kind side, where only have I found,
In this short wintry watch of cruel days,
Some sweetness of the bitter thing called life—
I loved Ægisthus, loving him shall die,
And dying, seek his arms beneath the ground:
Yon shade and me the holy gods shall judge,
No maiden's girdle, nor a beardless boy,
All green and dreamstruck in a tangled world.

ELECTRA.

Even of death she makes adultery.

Richard Le Gallienne

---

ORESTES.

The gods—not I!

(Clytemnestra moves toward palace and enters, followed by Orestes, sword in hand)

(Clytemnestra cries within)

(Re-enter Orestes, shaken and exhausted, with staring eyes. Leans on Pylades. With him enter two servants carrying the robe in which Agamemnon was murdered)

ORESTES.

O Pylades, it was a fearful deed!

ELECTRA.

Our father smiles upon you from his grave.

ORESTES.

Ah! but my mother's eyes . . .

How long ago it seems! Yet was she here

A moment since—soft breath and woman's tears...

Still the same sun . . . still the same faces here . . .

And still all changed . . .

Pylades, think you that the gods know all?

Methinks the work of gods too dread a thing

For shuddering hands of perishable clay,

And hearts like running water—I do fear

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

The deed I did was feller than the deed
It would avenge—that some old nature in us
Older than the gods cries out upon me
As a thing abhorred . . .
But 'twas for him I did it—

(Pointing to Agamemnon's robe)

See this royal robe, people of Argos,
See these bloody stains, these rents, these gashes,
This piteous pattern—Agamemnon's blood!
For him and Argos have I done this deed
That seemed but now the very will of heaven.

PYLADES.

Fear not, but smile upon this people here,
Freed from foul chains by your avenging sword,
That cleansed the land of serpents set on thrones.
See how your golden Argos shines again,
A jewel on the bosom of the world,
Laughs and is glad to have Orestes King . . .

ALL.

Orestes king! Long live our King Orestes!

ORESTES. (Pointing to Agamemnon's robe and moving toward the tomb)

Lay this as offering on my father's grave,
And I,

Richard Le Gallienne

---

(Takes an olive branch in his hand)

this suppliant olive in my hand,
Will as a pilgrim fare to Delphi's shrine,
Kneeling for benediction of the god.

(Furies appear behind Agamemnon's tomb)

What shapes are these that glare so strangely at me?

ELECTRA.

You are o'erwrought—come rest within the house.

(More shapes of Furies appear)

ORESTES.

Yonder again, away! what would you of me!
I did but what the holy gods decreed,
And my own sire commanded.

What are you
That mop and mow about me, and stretch out
Your bony fingers!

(Orestes turns hither and thither about the stage, seeking to escape the Furies, who menace him on every side)

What are you that shake
Your snaky locks, and with such baleful eyes

Orestes, A Tragedy

---

Pierce to the quaking centre of my soul!
O what are you, you webbed and taloned things
That steal like smoke about me and about!
See you these shapes, or are they, Pylades,
Nightmares and goblins of the tortured mind?
My eyes are filled with blood, and rending fires
Blaze in my brain—still, still they swarm about me . . .
Is this to do the bidding of the gods!—
Horror! they are my mother's vengeful hounds.

CURTAIN

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.

Please return promptly.

Qm NS

DUE OCT 31 47

~~DUE OCT 31 47~~

C

23498.6.5.35

Crested :

Widener Library

001431585

3 2044 086 863 313